Things tetting Desperate.

Things testing become at the Thursday night Constable Anderson and Mr. Edward Rosenthall started to take a walk up the road to the Seaboard Air-Line roundhouse. When part of the Constable to the Seaboard Air-Line roundhouse. the way up there, between the crossing at Blount's store and the depot, they heard two pistol shots fired. They stopped for a moment, and while stand-ing on the track a negro passed them. Constable Anderson said to him: "Say, stop a minute, who was that firing up the track just now." The negro said: "What do you want to know for," Anderson replied: "I am an officer and Anderson replied: "I am an officer and want to find out who it was." The negro said "it was me," at the same time firing at Anderson."

Mr. Anderson said that his pistol was in his pocket, but as quick as a flash he pulled it out and returned the fire. The negro walked a few steps and rolled over in a puddle of water. He thought then that he had shot him and advanced. When he got within and advanced. He thought then that he had shot him and advanced. When he got within ten feet of the negro he fired at him and ran. He then fired directly at the nergo as he was running. The negro hallowed and fell, but soon jumped up, and in the darkness he made his scape in Jones' cow yard on the shell road. Mr. Anderson says after the negro fell, his first thought was he killed him, but he considered the matter, thinking possibly the negro had done nothing to be shot for, but if he had had any idea that the negro was going to fire at him he would have ended his life. He thinks now, and is almost confident, that the negro is an escaped convict, who is wanted and for whom he mas a warrant. He went back out there last
